Japanese comics are famous all over the world. Despite their popularity, however, sales of comics in Japan had been dropping since 1995, and business experts were worried [11] the future of the comic. People simply were not buying them anymore.

However, recently sales have recovered and even improved. For the first time ever, sales of comics topped ¥600 billion yen [12] 2020 and increased another ¥70 billion in 2021. To understand this trend, we need to look at [13] comics have changed.

Comics are now available for every age. There are popular short comics for children (such as Doraemon). As children grow, they can explore themes of friendship or romance with shojo or shonen comics. People don't stop reading comics [14] they get older, and over 30% of readers are over age 45. For older readers, there are more serious stories about topics like intercultural awareness, [15] of historic stories, or mental health issues (though older readers may enjoy children's stories too). Whatever stage of life people are at, there is a comic to suit their interest.

[16] has caused the increase in comic sales? Of course, the Corona pandemic has meant people [17] more time on their own, and reading comics is one way to do that. However, the number of print books sold has not changed much. The real change is that more and more comics are now available online. Comics delivered [18] cellphones now make up over a staggering ¥400 billion. People no longer have to carry extra books with them. If they have their cellphone, they can just start [19]!

As a result, more companies, such as Line Manga or eBook Japan, are trying to get a piece of the market. The impact [20] changes like this will eventually affect readers all over Japan, Asia, and perhaps even the world.
