

What Dreams May Come

Author: Richard Matheson

奇蹟の輝き/リチャード・マシスン (著)

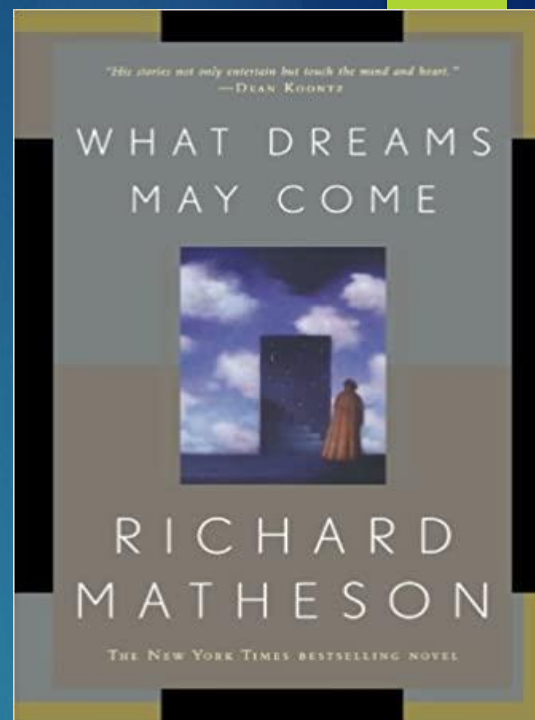

Although you probably do not know him, you have definitely seen or maybe even read his work. In addition to creating stories that inspired science fiction, fantasy and horror, this man has influenced writers like Stephen King and Anne Rice, directors like George A. Romero and producers such as Steven Spielberg. His name is Richard Matheson.

Richard Matheson writes about ordinary people who find themselves in extraordinary circumstances. What if you were the last man on earth? What if you could create your own paradise? What if you could talk to ghosts? What if you could make robots that think and feel? What if you found your true love, but that person was born one hundred years before you?

This theme of “what if...” permeates through all of his work and is what makes Matheson’s stories so memorable—because, ultimately he asks the question, “what would you do?”

As I mentioned at the beginning, you have probably seen some of his works made into film. Have you seen any of these movies?
